When in the process of outfitting one's home, it helps to have a designer with ample resources. For those homeowners who work with Candice Quinn and her team at London Pierce Design, this is an assurance quickly given, via her 9,500-square-foot flagship London Pierce Home store. With furnishings, accessories and even a selection of gifts, it proves a resource during and after a project is complete. The opening of the shop is the latest endeavor in Quinn's lifelong pursuit of design. After her father gifted her a Frank Lloyd Wright book, she was enamored. Today, her award-winning firm is beloved for its ability to tell clients' stories through artistic elements and a mix of materials and influences. Speaking of the latter, Quinn points to her female colleagues. "I absolutely love seeing women embrace their passion and succeed in life. I am inspired by hearing that they want to get into the industry and take every opportunity to offer my support."

"Seeing my creations come to life is the most motivating and energizing thing."

TIME FOR A TALENT

Asked to share a look into her typical workday, Quinn says, "It starts between four and five a.m., as I am a morning person. I begin with a five-shot Americano while watching the sunrise. I do my best work between five and eight in the morning, so that is my personal design time. Every day looks different depending on our client and project schedule, but I like to check in at the store, greet customers, work with my team in the studio and walk project sites."

Where does a design maven find inspiration? For Quinn, the answer is often Instagram.

- @ashleytstark has created a fabulous platform on Instagram. She is an incredible content creator. I love her style and refer to her feed often.
- @eyeswoon is where Athena Calderone tells a story through captivating images. The way she curates shows her incredible design sense but also her culinary talents.
